The joint and unified family has consistently been an indispensable piece of Hindu society for a long time. Indian culture has consistently been following the man-centric framework from its beginning. The target of the current paper is to inspect Hindu women's property rights under The Hindu Succession Act, 1956, and Hindu Succession (Amendment) Act, 2005 with the latest case laws. It additionally investigations the various situations between the past and the present as such with regards to the conveyance and status of the property. This paper will analyse the battle that the women have fought to achieve their property rights and equality despite being written in the Constitution. Women have always been subject to cruelty and suppressed by male dominance. They anyway are considered as an individual is relegated to a position of subjugation and abuse as she is made to suffer divergence and affront concerning her benefits, even more particularly her qualification to the property is ignored unmitigatedly. Each individual by the excellence of being conceived as a human has the inborn option to be treated with respect and correspondence in each part of life. The aim is to provide a brief overview of the struggle of daughter's rights in their father's property and the Judiciary which time to time interpreted the Act as to favor the daughters and remove gender inequality.
